Este estudio, un proyecto de Investigación I+D+i del Plan Nacional de Investigación y cofinanciado con fondos FEDER, propone que la tradición locera y el hábitat en cuevas el pago de La Atalaya de Santa Brígida, en Gran Canaria, son hechos recientes, históricos, y se explican por el asentamiento de familias majoreras en el lugar en los inicios del siglo XVIII. Así mismo, establece que la idea de la pervivencia de lo aborigen, en la actividad locera y el tipo de hábitat de La Atalaya, es fruto de la visión romántica construida por viajeros decimonónicos que creyeron ver en ellas la constatación de la presencia de modos de vida prehistóricos; y que, en última instancia, ha contribuido a construir la imagen identitaria que en la actualidad poseen muchos canarios de sí mismos y de su cultura.
