ARTHUR FIEDLER BOSTON POPS Harry Ellis Dickson

Harry Ellis Dickson, who had later been first violinist with the Boston Symphony, met Arthur Fiedler in 1931 and was his friend and colleague for more than 40 years. He provides insights into Arthur Fiedler, the peerless maestro and the workings of the orchestra he called "the classiest jukebox in the world." Dickson's account covers Fiedler's youth in Boston to his being a violinist with the Boston Symphony and being a man-about-town. But it was Arthur's great dream to have open-air summer symphony concerts, free to the public. His planning and fund raising made possible the first Esplanade Concert in 1929, and eventually led to his heyday as conductor of the Pops and becoming a beloved television and recording personality.
